A Green Mansion In Addison

If you thought living green meant moving into a stucco hut, think again. One of the greenest homes ever designed is going up in Addison all 14 thousand square feet of it. The utility bills for a mansion this size would normally cost more than three thousand dollars a month. For this house they'll be under a thousand dollars a month. Builder David Bell with D&A Fine Homes says the house is tightly sealed and the six million dollar, two story abode is a smart home too. You see all parts of it from the mechanics, the TV's, and everything electronic will be able to talk to each other. The plaster used to make the house is made from materials produced within a 100 mile radius and the termite pre-treat in the foundation organic. And it's going to be 85 percent super efficient LED or light emitting diode lighting.

When it's done by November, it'll boast 5 bedrooms, 9 baths, three living areas a media room with a stage for the children to perform, and a one car garage to help prevent fumes from wafting indoors. Bell says the home will be LEED (Leadership in Energy and Environmental Design) certified and hopefully at the top, or platinum level.
